Memorial march draws thousands in tribute to fallen police officers

Chicago Tribune

Children played on a patch of grass in the shadow of Soldier Field until the sound of bagpipes to the north drew their attention, and that of their parents.

“C’m on, c’m on!” one woman said, nudging a child as the pipes approached, escorted by police officers on motorcycles and flanked by thousands of Chicago police officers. “Daddy’s coming,” another woman said to her child.

Once a year the officers in Chicago—along with some from Cook County and a handful from the New York Police Department—march past the Gold Star Families Memorial and Park at the lakefront near 18th Street. The park features a wall memorializing officers who died in the line of duty.

And though the parade, called the St. Jude Police Memorial March, is open to the public, it exists for police officers scattered across 22 patrol districts, three detective divisions and dozens of smaller units to honor their colleagues killed in the line of duty.

When an officer dies, his surviving kin becomes a Gold Star family. Similar to the way military families honor soldiers killed in the line of duty, officers’ families honor their loved ones with flags bearing a single gold star.

While the St. Jude Police Memorial March usually doesn’t draw many members of the public and police often outnumber family, the parade serves as a reunion for officers scattered across the city who once shared a watch.

On Sunday, though, it seemed there were more children than adults. Some wore dress coats bearing a Chicago Police Department patch, a miniature version of the formal dress or “Class A” uniform the thousands of officers wore for the parade.

Even many of the pets wore checkered collars, like the band around the crown covers worn by officers.

Police Superintendent Garry McCarthy, Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle and Cook County State’s Attorney Anita Alvarez watched from a viewing stand.

Mike Ryan, a 62-year-old boiler inspector for the city, was drawn to the scene because his daughter Megan is a police officer working in the Chicago Lawn district. She graduated from the academy two weeks ago.

“I was a little leery at first,” said Ryan, noting that his daughter has wanted to be a police officer since she was a child. Seeing the parade and talking to officers helped him feel better about his daughter’s calling.

“They got each other’s backs at all times,” he said. “It makes me feel a little better.

“This is nice that they do this,” he added. “This is pretty sharp.”

YOUNG MONEY

MODERN INTELLIGENCE
FOR A MEAN ECONOMY

The bridal bamboozle

Deeply discounted wedding gowns can be gorgeous—or fakes

Reuters

Christine Stachurski said yes to the dress—and then the dress turned out to be a fake.

“You get this thing in the back of your mind that says it’s probably too good to be true and I should have listened to it,” said Stachurski, 37, of Fontana, Calif.

Stachurski had been duped in a way that is becoming more common as consumers order discount dresses for weddings, proms and other special occasions online.

The dresses don’t come cheap, so it’s easy to understand the drive to find a bargain. The average wedding dress cost is now $1,281, according to a survey of 13,000 brides and grooms released in March by theknot.com. Dresses that cost more than $3,000 are not unusual, and prices can go far higher.

Those who want to pay less go can go to a well-established U.S. retailer with an online presence, like David’s Bridal, or sites that sell used couture, including tradesy.com, nearlynewlywed.com and oncewed.com. You can also go to a well-regarded local consignment shop.

But many shoppers are falling prey to counterfeiters operating through foreign-owned websites. An estimated 600,000 dresses were illegally sold in the United States last year, according to the American Bridal and Prom Industry Association, a trade group.

Stachurski and her fiancé were in the bargain market because they wanted to keep their beach wedding a low-budget affair. When she found the perfect dress for $136, she felt lucky. It even arrived on time.

HOW TO SPOT A FAKE

» Warning signs abound for dresses that are fakes. Seeing a big discount on a name-brand dress, or promises of inexpensive custom orders, are the biggest warning signs. Wedding dress prices are largely controlled by the makers and distributors, industry officials say.

» Before ordering, be sure the site or retailer is on a list of authorized sellers of the dress manufacturer, the bridal association recommends. Consumers can also check reviews posted to the Better Business Bureau site (BBB.org) or to forums such as ripoffreport.com and sitejabber.com.

» Be sure of the origins of the site. Consumers have far more protection when buying from U.S. vendors. Nearly every site on the bridal association’s watch list is based in China, says Roanna Rose, owner of TJ Formal in Joplin, Mo.

» Not everyone who buys a cheap dress online is getting scammed, Rose notes. She actually has had customers come to the store to ask to get measured so they could buy the cheap fake online.

But once Stachurski opened the package, she found the dress was not only a wrinkled mess, but also was mis-sized, had raw edges, bunched up fabric and other obvious flaws. “As my fiancé said, ‘It looked like a drunken monkey put it together with a stapler.’”

After the seller, a China-based website, told her they would accept a return if she would pay the $90 shipping charge, PayPal agreed to refund the transaction. Stachurski ended up just going to the mall and buying a casual dress off the rack. An email from Reuters asking the site to comment about the issues was not answered.

ting a counterfeit dress are common, says Steve Lang, chief executive officer of the bridal dress company Mon Cheri and president of the American Bridal and Prom Industry Association. He often hears of broken-hearted brides and prom-goers, with tales not only of missed weddings or proms, but also people who have had their identities stolen and their credit ruined.

“A dress that sells for $2,500 you can order for $195 and you expect it to be the same? Horrific differences,” Lang said.

The association has been aggressively pursuing the counterfeit sites, winning a court order earlier this year that halted about 1,100 foreign-based sites and froze nearly $1 million in PayPal transactions alone, Lang says.

The problem had been accelerating at a breakneck pace, says Roanna Rose, owner of TJ Formal in Joplin, Mo., who has been monitoring the scam sites for the association. When she first started keeping track in 2011, she had a list of about 150 suspected scam sites. The list now totals more than 7,000.

$750K bail in fatal crash

Chicago Tribune

A Lakeview man accused of killing a woman after he struck the taxi she was riding in early Friday while allegedly driving the wrong way drunk on Lake Shore Drive was ordered held on $750,000 bail Sunday in Cook County Bond Court.

LaPlante

Erik Johnson, 23, of the 3500 block of North Janssen Avenue, faces charges of reckless homicide, aggravated DUI and other counts in the wrong-way crash that killed Laura Anne LaPlante, a University of Chicago law student, and injured three others, including himself.

Johnson's father, Bill Johnson, flew in from Long Island and apologized outside the courtroom for the "tragic accident."

"We've been praying since we heard about it," he said.

Johnson drove his 2014 Subaru SUV south onto northbound Lake Shore near Grand Avenue about 1:50 a.m. Friday, Assistant State's Attorney Colleen Rogers said.

LaPlante, 26, of Hancock, N.H., and a 24-year-old man were in a taxi that was coming around the curve of the drive just south of the river when Johnson's SUV hit it, Rogers said.

Johnson's blood alcohol content was more than twice the legal limit, she said. After the crash, Johnson told paramedics he had had five or six beers and shots of liquor, she said.

LaPlante and her fellow passenger were not wearing seat belts, Rogers said. She was pronounced dead about 6:30 p.m. Friday at Northwestern Memorial Hospital, the Cook County medical examiner's office said.

The 24-year-old suffered severe head and chest trauma and broken legs, Rogers said. He was in serious condition at Northwestern as of Saturday, she said.

The taxi driver, 38, suffered a fractured elbow and was treated and released, she said.

Johnson was taken to Stroger Hospital, she said.

Clark St., about an alert the shop received after a custom-made, $10,000 guitar was stolen in March from heavy metal rocker Zakk Wylde's tour bus outside The Chicago Theatre. A shop employee bought the guitar from a man for $50 on March 24, about 10 days after it was reported stolen. Seeking an expert opinion on the guitar's origin, the Cohen brothers said they had it taken to Chicago Music Exchange on Friday, where staff members quickly identified it as Wylde's stolen guitar. A Chicago police spokesman confirmed that detectives recovered the guitar Friday. TRIBUNE

19 dead after train derails in India

5 At least 19 people were killed and more than 130 injured when a passenger train was derailed in western India on Sunday, police said. The accident took place around 60 miles south of India's financial capital Mumbai.

Acrobats injured during live circus show in R.I.

6 Eight acrobats were seriously injured when they tumbled at least 25 feet to the ground after an aerial apparatus collapsed during a circus performance in Rhode Island on Sunday, the circus company's owners said.

About 10 other performers also were injured in the accident which happened around noon during a performance by the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus at the Dunkin' Donuts Center in Providence, the Providence Fire Department said.

The acrobats, all female, had just begun a "hair hang" performance, swinging through midair tethered by their hair, when the equipment holding them collapsed, according to Stephen Payne, a spokesman for Feld Entertainment, the parent company of Ringling Brothers.

The women, who were hanging from different heights, fell between 25 and 40 feet to the ground and a performer on the floor also was injured badly, fire officials said.

Because the performers were attached to the equipment and could not let go of it, a safety net below was not required, Payne said.

There was no immediate description of the kinds of injuries the performers suffered but all were expected to survive.

Aletha Wood, who was at the circus with her two young children, said the collapse happened quickly, stunning the audience.

"It was a pretty packed house," she said. "There was a metal disc hanging from the ceiling and it looked like it was being held by a single cable. The ringmaster had just said 'hanging by a single string,' when the cable snapped and the women came down," she said.

The performers did not scream as they fell, but there was a "collective gasp" from spectators who were unsure at first whether the collapse was part of the act or an accident, Wood said.

Seconds later, emergency and medical officials descended on the scene, she said.

The cause of the collapse was under investigation.

Center aims to ID migrants who die trying to cross border

7 TUSCON, Ariz. Every year thousands of migrants cross the U.S.-Mexico border illegally into Arizona. Some make it to their destination. Others get picked up by authorities.

Hundreds more perish in the Sonoran desert. Some bodies are never identified and families of the missing can languish for years without word of their loved ones. A new Tucson-based organization is hoping to change that.

On Saturday, the Colibri Center for Human Rights officially launched, hoping to address what its organizers call a "very serious human rights crisis on the border." The center, which is supported by the Ford Foundation and others, is an expansion of an earlier effort known as the Missing Migrant Project, which already had collected, organized and centralized information for what is regarded as the most comprehensive database in the nation on missing and unidentified migrants.

FULL FORCEIf only you knew the power of the Hawk side ...By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

It was useless for Minnesota to resist.

The Blackhawks have a 2-0 lead in their playoff series against Minnesota after a 4-1 win Sunday at the United Center.

Maybe it was the Force—Sunday was May the 4th, aka “Star Wars Day”—that propelled the Hawks to victory. They looked shaky at times but overwhelmed Minnesota when they had to, scoring two goals in the third period.

“They’re a patient team and they play well defensively, and sometimes when they do that you get frustrated,” Hawks forward Brandon Saad said. “Just sticking to your game plan and keep bringing the pace and playing well, it’s just something you’ve gotta do consistently.”

Of course, you could point to the Hawks’ abundance of talent and experience as the keys to their success. That might be the simplest explanation for why the Hawks have now won six straight postseason games.

The series switches to Minnesota on Tuesday for Game 3, and so far in the playoffs the Wild are like the determined Skywalker family: not to be counted out. This is the same team that recovered from a 2-0 hole to win their first-round series against favored Colorado.

“We have to put that in our heads that we can still come back,” Wild forward Charlie Coyle said. “We’ve done it before. And that’s it.”

Well, almost. We’re going to keep this Star Wars theme going a little while longer.

CHSOSA@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYESPORTSCHI

Brandon Saad
USA TODAY SPORTS

Cody McCormick = Darth Vader

Clearly the villain of this game. First McCormick charged right through Jeremy Morin, practically dumping the Hawks forward into the Wild bench.

Then he made the UC temporarily miserable by cutting the Hawks’ lead to 2-1 in the third period.

Cody McCormick (front) checks Jeremy Morin into the bench.
USA TODAY SPORTS

Clayton Stoner = Jar Jar Binks

The Minnesota defenseman has proved to be really, really annoying in the first two games of this series. In Game 1, he clocked Andrew Shaw, knocking him out of the game. And early in Game 2, Stoner served a penalty for cross-checking Brandon Saad after the whistle. Appropriately enough, it appeared Stoner did it because Saad was laughing at him.

Jonathan Toews = Obi-Wan Kenobi

Is this guy ever going to lighten up? Actually, a better reason to compare the Hawks' all-business captain to Skywalkers' mentor is that both are masters of their weapon of choice. Toews followed up a shot on a Marian Hossa breakaway by swatting in the rebound to put the Hawks up 1-0. Not as easy as it looks.

Corey Crawford = R2-D2

Let's see. Who's always getting knocked around, saving his team from disaster and not always getting credit for it? That's the Hawks goaltender in a nutshell. Crawford made "only" 18 saves Sunday, but he was under duress from the Wild for about two-thirds of the game.

Quotable: "We talked about it, shutting [the Wild] down, keep playing hard and keep playing the way we can and not sitting back. Sometimes teams create chances and are able to muster up some plays. They made a great play on us on their goal, but we just stuck with it."
—Corey Crawford

Bryan Bickell = Han Solo

What can we say, the Blackhawks forward has his swagger back. Bickell has been outstanding in the playoffs the past two seasons and seems to be able to blast his way out of any situation. Moments after rattling one off the goal post Sunday, he fired one past Wild goaltender Ilya Bryzgalov to make it 3-1 Blackhawks. He also had a pair of assists.

Quotable: "We're being very predictable as line mates and that's what makes him fun to play with right now. He's doing a good job checking that [Zach] Parise line regardless of who he's playing with, and we've gotta continue that."

—Jonathan Toews

Dany Heatley (front) shoots against Corey Crawford.
NUCCIO DI MUZZO/TRIBUNE

Brandon Saad = Chewbacca

Like the famous Wookiee, Saad is known for his signature fur. Er, hair. The mullet and racing stripes were in full effect Sunday, as Saad scored his first two goals of the 2014 playoffs. Raaaaaawwwwwww! "It's easy to talk about, to keep battling through it," he said after the game. "But to finally get one in, it feels good. You've gotta keep rolling now."

Niklas Hjalmarsson = C-3PO

You feel sorry for the punishment the guy takes every game. The Hawks' leading shot blocker was credited for four more Sunday, including one off the neck. True to form though, Hjalmarsson didn't miss a shift.

Quotable: "He's a warrior. That's an unusual place to get hit for him, but very rarely do we see him miss a shift after a big block. It's one thing to do whatever you can to keep the puck away from the net, but he's special in that area."

—Coach Joel Quenneville

Michal Handzus = Yoda

You might think we're picking on the 37-year-old Handzus' age (Yoda was 900 when he died, remember). And you'd be partly right. Yet the veteran also knows how to pick his spots when expending serious energy. He won six faceoffs and was credited with one hit Sunday: the "old man" has still got it.

You win, hockey—I'm sold ... at least for now

Jay St. Pierre

» @jayst pierre

I'm not a virgin anymore.

Yeah, that's right, I went to my first hockey game—the second-round opener between the Blackhawks and Minnesota. And boy, was it a wild one.

I remember my first football game. Jerry Rice lit up the Saints for about 150 yards and two touchdowns.

My first baseball game was impressive. Chipper Jones hit a huge home run for the Braves and my favorite right fielder at the time, Jermaine Dye, threw someone out trying to advance from first to third.

My first basketball game was unforgettable. David West put up 38 points to lead the then-Hornets to a win against the Spurs in the Western Conference finals.

And with all those special memories, Friday's five-goal Blackhawks win ranks right up there.

I've been pretty vocal since moving to Chicago about my disinterest in hockey. Well, that has all changed, for three simple reasons.

1. Jersey shore

My God, you Hawks fans love your jerseys. Walking around the concourse, I couldn't help but notice the insane amount of them. Now, don't get me wrong, Saints fans love their jerseys, but we mix in a few polos, T-shirts and button-downs. Real fan bases know how to support their teams, and wearing those jerseys is step No. 1.

2. Pregame powerhouse

I've heard the national anthem sung a few hundred times. But never have I ever (yeah, that's a reference to that game we played as kids) heard it sung by Jim Cornelson. Watching on TV, I've always wondered why fans go nuts over this guy. That question was answered when I heard the reaction to him in person. You get chills when you hear a sold-out arena erupt like that. It's matched only by the anthem I heard Carrie Underwood sing at Super Bowl XLIV.

3. Lay off Corey

You have my word, I will not say ANYTHING bad about Corey Crawford for the rest of the season. The game is so much faster in person—TV really doesn't do it justice—and hearing the puck smash against his pads is like hearing someone drop a dumbbell on a gym floor. The box score said he saved 30 shots, but I swear he got knocked around way more than that.

I'll be back for more. It's just the latest postseason event I've been lucky enough to check off my list. I guess a World Series is the only thing left. But I won't hold my breath for that one, at least not while I'm living in this city.

1	Cinco de Mayo parties are to Chicago sports as drinking margaritas is to writing your 5 on 5 answers. Pass the lime!	I had too many mint juleps this weekend to understand this question.	... not winning is to all Chicago sports not played on ice.	... Cinco De Mayo is to my life: too much tequila and you just know I'm going to end up cursing and making my girlfriend mad.	... sweet tea is to Southerners: a daily necessity in the summertime.
2	Give fans a reason to watch the Crosstown Classic this week.	Bring a bottle of tequila and margarita mix. That'll make it bearable. Where did I put that rim salt?	Catch the drunken bleacher fights live, before they hit YouTube.	When else are you going to watch the Sox or the Cubs this year?	Jose Abreu will hit a home run so far that he accidentally pelt a soccer mom walking on Southport!	Are we talking about Cubs-Sox baseball or the Crosstown Classic 10K? Because both are equally riveting.
3	The NBA playoffs so far have been blurry. I think I've been too generous with the tequila.	... sphincter-testing.	Oh, is that still going on?	... amazing, except for the Bulls. Everyone should be rooting for the Blazers from here on.	... insane in the membrane. Who sang that?
4	What changes for the Hawks with the series shifting to Minnesota?	The accents of the hotel staff? Speaking of hotels, where's the ice machine?	The groupies.	Hopefully nothing. More winning.	The most famous rapper they'll have to hear goes from Nelly to Atmosphere. Now that's a transition!	Game plan for Billy Bob Thornton. I've been watching a lot of " Fargo " lately, and he scares the [bleep] out of me.
5	What will Patrick Kane's next spectacular goal look like?	Like this drink in my hand: cool and oh-so-sweet.	So beautiful it will be invisible to the naked eye. Only dogs will hear the goal horn.	Look, Ma, no hands!	Two words: Knuckle. Puck.	I think Ernest put it best. "IT'S KNUCKLE PUCK TIME!!!"

Baseball's true believers

By Emily Brown | REDEYE

There are 2,430 baseball games in Major League Baseball's regular season. At 3 hours per game, that's about 304 days' worth (7,290 hours) of watching TV packed into about six months.

Two Chicago-area residents are undertaking that challenge. Cubs fan Michael Bolling and White Sox fan Stanten Jones uprooted their lives to move to New York in March after they were among the eight fans selected to be part of this year's MLB Fan Cave.

Bolling, 23, was born on the West Side and has lived in the city his entire life. Jones, 23, is from the Homewood-Flossmoor area. He left his job at the Nike store on Michigan Avenue for the move.

"I knew it was going to be great fun and [a] life-changing, a once-in-a-lifetime experience, but my expectations have been blown out of the water," Jones said. "It's bigger and larger than life. It's like baseball nirvana."

In addition to consuming every possible minute of baseball, Bolling and Jones spend a great deal of their time interacting with fans.

"I would talk with a couple people through social media before this, but now [a lot more] people actually answer me," Jones said. "I have a lot more interaction [on Twitter]."

The bulk of their work is done in front of the "Cave Monster," a bank of 15 46-inch screens. When he's not watching games, Bolling acts as a fan ambassador, leading tours of the Fan Cave.

"Games start at 12 p.m. and end at 2:30 a.m.," said Bolling, who lives with the other cave dwellers in the SoHo neighborhood, about a 10-minute walk from the Fan Cave. "The tours are on Fridays and weekends, but there are so many TV screens. Everywhere I look there's a TV, so even if I take my eye off one TV, there's another I can see."

Jones, meanwhile, studies the unusual concessions at each ballpark and tries to figure out ways to get those foods into the Cave, all while tweeting and blogging his progress.

The Fan Cave opened in 2011, but this is the first year it has hosted the MTV2 show "Off The Bat." The show strives to give fans an inside look into the lives of baseball players off the field, and the cave dwellers are featured in a short segment each episode.

"It's cool to connect with fans," Bolling said. "The MLB uses them and us to connect with the world of pop culture and baseball. ... We're not the stars of the show. It's cool to interact with them."

"Who Do You Love?"

When it comes to storytelling, breakout rapper YG believes in nothing but the truth

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

YG's major-label debut, "My Krazy Life," unfolds like an early John Singleton film ("Boyz n the Hood"), tracing a day in the life of the West Coast rapper as he crashes parties, fights with his girlfriend, burglarizes homes, is jailed for his crimes and, ultimately, apologizes to his mom for his misdeeds on the heartfelt track "Sorry Momma."

The album, which arrives awash in bouncing, ratchet beats courtesy of DJ Mustard, is far from some Hollywood production, however. In a mid-April phone interview, the 24-year-old rapper repeatedly insisted, "All them stories are real."

"If the [listener] knows your story," continued YG, born Keenon Jackson in Compton, Calif., "then they feel like they know you."

Is your life crazier now than it was during the years that inspired the songs on the album?

My life is crazier since I dropped the album. Last year ... it wasn't looking too good for me. You feel me? Things started happening, and now we're doing the [bleep] we were hoping to do. [Bleep] is crazy.

How closely does the content of the record mirror your own life?

It is my life, bro. All the stories I'm telling are real stories that happened years ago, or some [bleep] I just went through. A majority of the rappers I admire, they talking about they life and situations and how they went about things. If you on some real artist [bleep] and you want that respect, you gotta let the people know your story.

Are there any Chicago rappers who have caught your ear recently with their ability to tell their own stories?

Yeah, I [bleep] with Lil Durk and Lil Reese. I like they [bleep] because they from the streets and they just talk about they culture. It's [bleep] people know about and [bleep] people can relate to.

Did Kendrick Lamar's "good kid, m.A.A.d. city" have any influence on how you approached "My Krazy Life"?

"Doggystyle," "Get Rich or Die Tryin',"

"Ready to Die," "The Chronic 2001"—I was listening to those albums. I mean, what [Kendrick] did and what I did is what the old homies Snoop and Dre and everybody did back in the day: We made real albums. I think because of that everyone is comparing our albums ... [but] the whole structure and thought process of ["My Krazy Life"] came from those classics. I feel like if you put out an album, you're supposed to be telling a story. It's like a movie. If it ain't like that, then it's not a classic. It's just a bunch of songs stuck together.

Every new review seems to mention your growth as a rapper. Is that something you hear when you listen to the record? Or do you feel you've always had that skill set and it's just been overlooked?

Damn, bro. I feel like I was rapping way better on my album than on my mixtapes. I was taking my time with records and verses, and I was really talking about real stories people could relate to. I think people [bleep] with it because of that. With the mixtapes, I'd just start rapping and I'd record it. I took the album a whole other way.

You mention your absentee father a couple times throughout the album. How do you think that experience shaped the man you are today?

When I was like [age] 16 through 19 or something like that, my pops did three years in prison, and when he did that time was when I really stepped out and was in the streets and I started gang-banging and raiding houses—all the [bleep] I'm talking about on the album. That all started when my pops went to jail.

Have you played "Sorry Momma" for your mom yet?

She heard it when the album came out. She told me she can't listen to the whole song because she cried too much.

You go into careful detail on how to burglarize a home on "Meet the Flockers." When you were breaking into houses, did you ever have a "Home Alone"-like situation where some stranded kid got the best of you?

[Laughs.] Naw, I ain't never had one of them situations.

What would your advice have been for Joe Pesci and Daniel Stern in that film?

Man, they was kind of, like, dumb, right? They didn't have it all together in the head, so they shouldn't have been doing what they was trying to do anyways. That wasn't their thing. They seemed like a couple college dropouts. They should have just stayed at home.

Kiefer Sutherland in '24'

Jack's back, baby!

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

» @showpatrol

Jack Bauer couldn't stay off the grid forever. Four years after "24" ended, Kiefer Sutherland's iconic spy is racing the clock again in "24: Live Another Day."

Detractors will say Day 9 repeats the same old formula from eight seasons of "24" as if that's a bad thing. Sure, it's familiar—but like a roller coaster you refuse to quit, it's a wildly entertaining, addictive thrill ride.

The last time we saw Jack, he went into exile to escape the U.S. and Russian governments after saving the day in a completely Baueriffic way—at great personal cost and appearing to be the worst of the baddies.

"Live Another Day" picks up the story four years later. Still on the run, Jack resurfaces just as the CIA intercepts intel about an assassination attempt on U.S. President James Heller (William Devane), who is in London with his daughter and aide, Audrey Raines (Kim Raver). She's married to Heller's slippery chief of staff, Mark Boudreau (Iate Donovan), and just happens to be Jack's former flame.

Worried that Jack might be the killer, CIA operations chief Steve Navarro (Benjamin Bratt) dispatches his team to track Jack down. CIA field operative Kate Morgan (Yvonne

24: Live Another Day
7 p.m. Monday, Fox

Strahovski) thinks there's more to Jack's resurrection than Fox looking for a May Sweeps ratings spike. She makes it her mission to uncover the truth—which will eventually involve the intriguing Big Bad played by "Game of Thrones" actress Michelle Fairley (RIP Catelyn Stark).

Before the two-hour premiere ends, Jack's once-loyal scream-catcher Chloe O'Brian (Mary Lynn Rajskub) also resurfaces. Like Jack, Chloe has gone underground since leaving CTU. She's using her computer prowess for a Wikileaks-type outfit that spills government secrets. Snarky as ever, Chloe sports heavy eyeliner, dark hair and a raging anger against business, government and Jack. Their fractious relationship adds dramatic heft to the story.

Chloe's new job also offers "24" a chance to do what it always has—comment on real-world issues through its hyper-adrenalized drama. This time it's taking on security woes, government secrecy and abuse, drone warfare, questionable surveillance and the twin evils of terrorism and government corruption.

"Live Another Day" starts its 12-episode run in a typically gripping if superficial and improbable fashion, but you'll get no complaints from me. Jack's back, dammit, let him do whatever it takes to deliver true justice.

A Celebration of Neighborhoods.

'This is the Spider-Man I want to be'

Los Angeles Times

Andrew Garfield, the star of "The Amazing Spider-Man 2," took one glance around the Bel-Air eatery and made a quick assessment:

"Peter Parker wouldn't be allowed in here," the 30-year-old said with a nod.

It is nearly impossible to picture the brainy, blue-collar kid from Forest Hills, Queens, enjoying fine California cuisine, and even Garfield, who has lived inside Peter Parker's skin for the past few years, seems a little too low-key and comfortably unkempt.

But Peter's outsider quality and transformation deeply appealed to Garfield long before he ever starred in a blockbuster. The self-described skinny kid in England who was bullied by his classmates found solace—and hope—in the webslinger.

"I needed a myth," Garfield said of his attraction to Spider-Man. "I needed a story to put myself into to understand where I was at, to remind me that it's OK to be imperfect. ... You can be imperfect and still be a hero. That's incredibly empowering for young people."

In the new $200-million production—directed like its predecessor by Marc Webb—Garfield's wall-crawling hero is beset by numerous threats, chief among them Jamie Foxx's Electro, an incandescent blue bad guy who wields the ability to control the power grid.

Even as he tries to contain the damage Electro inflicts, Peter Parker struggles to learn more about his own past, including his father's demise. He's also wrestling with his relationship with Gwen Stacy (Emma Stone), attempting to balance his feelings for her with his desire to keep her out of harm's way.

It's the kind of conflicted, complicated character that appeals to the actor.

"This is the Spider-Man movie that I want to make," Garfield said. "This is the Spider-Man that I want to portray, and this is the Spider-Man that I want to have the opportunity to be."

Webb said he disliked the idea of the sequel being known as a darker film, and Garfield said he sought to bring a joyous spirit to even the most difficult scenes.

"Me and Marc were both like, 'What is Spider-Man to us?'" Garfield said. "Spider-Man is the trickster, the neurotic, talk-too-much giddy teenage boy that's really a ... rebel. I wanted somehow to try to have fun in every scene even if the situation was awful."

Garfield isn't too worried about outgrowing the character, despite playing someone so many years his junior.

"I got a lot to figure out still," Garfield said. "It's never done."

Jokes, partisan jabs fly at correspondents' dinner

Reuters

President Obama poked fun at himself and what he called a hard year, but aimed his most caustic humor at Washington gridlock on Saturday when the political and media elites gathered at the annual White House Correspondents' Association dinner.

"In 2008 my slogan was, 'Yes we can.' In 2013, it was control-alt-delete," Obama joked to an audience also studded with film and TV stars.

"At one point, things got so bad the 47 percent called Mitt Romney to apologize," he said, referring to the 2012 presidential campaign scandal in which Romney was secretly taped saying that 47 percent of Americans have become reliant on government handouts.

More than 2,000 guests packed the ballroom of the Washington Hilton, where the capital's political and media worlds collide every year in lubricated goodwill punctuated by a long dash of glamour on loan from Hollywood. The association marked its 100th year this year.

The president highlighted some of the low points of his administration's year, dwelling on the disastrous rollout of the website for his landmark health insurance reform legislation.

"Of course we rolled out healthcare.gov. That could have gone better," he deadpanned.

Later he turned on Republican opponents in Congress who are clamoring to repeal the legislation despite higher than expected enrollment figures in the government health care exchanges: "How well does Obamacare have to work before you stop trying to repeal it?"

In a self-deprecating crack at his own low popularity ratings, the president referred to his fellow Democrats not wanting to campaign with him for November congressional elections in a wistful joke involving one of his daughters: "I did notice the other day that Sasha needed a speaker for career day and she invited Bill Clinton."

Joel McHale, star of NBC comedy "Community," hosted the event, which featured such stars as Oscar winner Lupita Nyong'o, directors Steve McQueen and Alfonso Cuarón, actresses Diane Lane, Olivia Munn, Julianna Margulies and Julia Louis-Dreyfus.

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Taurus April 20-May 20

Money is on your mind lately. Figure out ways to generate multiple streams of income so your financial situation can become more secure. If your honey doesn't understand how important this is, consider ending your romance.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 2

With the sun opposite your sign, your energy levels and confidence could be low. You need to spend some time by yourself to recharge your batteries. Don't get pressured into making any big romantic decisions just now.

Gemini May 21-June 21

Mercury will be in your sign for a few weeks, and this will give you lots of creative ideas. You might give yourself a makeover and adopt a new, glamorous look. Or you could decide to help a friend remake his or her life.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

A romance is heating up, and you could become obsessed with that certain someone. The moon says enjoy passionate vibes with your partner, but don't forget to go to work and pay your bills, too.

Cancer June 22-July 22

You need to make sure others aren't taking advantage of you. Saturn is reminding you to set some boundaries. In your romantic situation, work on improving your communication with your honey so things can flow better.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

You could receive an intriguing job offer or be given an unusual opportunity for schooling or training. The sun is shining a huge light on your career right now, so don't ignore it. Your personal life will sort itself out soon enough.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

Your fiery charms will be on full display as the moon enhances your sex appeal. This is a great time to meet new people and expand your social circle. If your current honey is way too boring, it could be time for an upgrade.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

A relationship has a back-and-forth, on-again-off-again feeling. Mercury is creating some confusion. You might enjoy spending time with your partner, but you're not sure if you want to stay with this person forever.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

You could be attracted to two people at once. Mercury is increasing your sense of compatibility with two friends. You might get along with one person better on a physical level while the other person inspires you emotionally.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

With the moon opposite your sign, you could be questioning your love life. If you're committed to someone, maybe you're having doubts. If you're single, you might be panicking about settling down as soon as possible.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

Don't make any rash decisions this week. Sometimes you can be your own worst enemy, and you make self-destructive choices. Mars is inspiring you to take better care of yourself.

Aries March 21-April 19

You're in an impulsive mood as Venus makes you restless. If you're single, you'll finally get up the nerve to ask that gorgeous guy or girl out. If you're in a relationship, you could be tempted to give your partner an ultimatum.

DOES YOUR BLADDER HAVE YOU ON THE RUN?

If you have to go to the bathroom often and experience urinary leakage, you may want to consider taking part in a medical research study assessing the effects of two medications for overactive bladder.

To qualify, you must meet the following criteria:

- Be 18 years of age or older
- Have the need to urinate frequently throughout the day and experience a sudden urge to urinate for at least the past 6 months
- Have taken at least one overactive bladder medication and not done well with it

Other criteria will also be assessed to confirm if you can participate.

Seth Meyers makes transition from 'SNL' to 'Late Night'

Seth Meyers broke out a Chicago accent during his monologue on Thursday's episode of "Late Night With Seth Meyers" when joking about the city's ban on plastic grocery bags. The Northwestern University and iO alum lengthened his A's during the impersonation ("plaaastic") and stretched out the sides of his mouth for emphasis.

Asked about his inspiration for the accent, Meyers credited his writing staff.

"We have a lot of 'SNL'—I'm sorry, we have a lot of 'Late Night' writers who are from the area," said Meyers, in a tuxedo in his Soldier Field suite before performing Saturday at Make-A-Wish Illinois' Wish Ball. "They don't have [Chicago accents], but they like to do them. It's the best."

This probably wasn't Meyers' first time mixing up "Saturday Night Live" and "Late Night," and it likely won't be his last. He spent 13 years at "SNL" before taking over "Late Night" from Jimmy Fallon in February. And it probably doesn't help that both shows tape on the same floor in New York's Rockefeller Plaza and are both produced by Lorne Michaels.

"'SNL' is like 'SimCity,'" Meyers said. "It moves really fast. If you're gone for a week, it's almost like a new vocabulary has been born when you weren't there. It's ... really funny how quickly you don't know how the heart beats there."

While Meyers performed for a crowd of about 940 guests at Wish Ball, Joel McHale took the podium as the featured entertainer at the White House Correspondents' Dinner—a position Meyers held in 2011. Meyers famously zinged President Obama about his inability to capture Osama bin Laden, unaware at the time, like the rest of us, that U.S. intelligence had located bin Laden and would raid his compound the day after the event.

"I do feel like I'm a part of history. I'll talk about it tonight because it's the three-year anniversary, but it's always nice to think I made the last living Osama bin Laden joke," said Meyers, laughing.

Meyers often seems like he's on the verge of cracking up when speaking. And because it seems genuine, you can't help but laugh yourself. Also contagious: the giddy excitement he showed during our conversation while discussing everything from Kanye West's "The College Dropout" to Donald Trump's angry tweets about him Friday in retaliation for Meyers' many jokes about Trump at the 2011 correspondents' dinner.

"It would be tacky if every year I reminded people on Twitter of my performance," Meyers said. "But I don't have to, because Donald Trump does it for me."

According to Time magazine, the 40-year-old Meyers is one of the 100 most influential people in the world in 2014. The talk show host made the Time 100 last month, along with former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, Pope Francis, and singer Beyonce Knowles.

On Aug. 25, Meyers will host the Emmy Awards for the first time. He hosted ESPN's ESPYs in 2011.

One show Meyers doesn't feel he's quite ready to host is the one that made him famous.

"I would like to put that a little bit further in the future, mostly because I don't think I'd be very good at it," Meyers said about potentially hosting "SNL." "It would be a thing I wouldn't be able to say no to. Like [Andy] Samberg will be great when he does it for the season finale—that's a no-brainer. It's a some-brainer for me."

“If I hadn’t been told I was garbage,

I wouldn’t have learned how to show people I’m talented. And if everyone had always laughed at my jokes, I wouldn’t have figured out how to be so funny. If they hadn’t told me I was ugly, I never would have searched for my beauty. And if they hadn’t tried to break me down, I wouldn’t know that I’m unbreakable. So when you ask me how I’m so confident, I know what you’re really asking me: How could someone like me be confident? Go ask Rihanna, [bleep]hole!”

The CUTEST cruise

Pack your vintage polo dresses into your set of matched monogrammed luggage—Wes Anderson is setting sail. The “Grand Budapest Hotel” director, along with actors Jason Schwartzman and Tilda Swinton, will host a Q-and-A session with passengers of The Queen Mary 2, and Anderson’s movies will be shown on board, according to pagesix.com. The cruise ship departs June 13 from New York. Anyone up for stowing away?

Wedding makeover

Chicago interior designer Nate Berkus and Jeremiah Brent were married in a private ceremony Saturday at the New York Public Library, E! Online reports. “American Dream Builders” host Berkus and Brent, a former personal assistant to stylist Rachel Zoe, announced their engagement in April 2013.

Gladiator baby

Kerry Washington has had a baby girl, People confirmed. Apparently the “Scandal” stars’ on-air stealthiness has rubbed off on her real life—Washington and husband Nnamdi Asomugha managed to keep the birth quiet for nearly two weeks. TMZ reports they welcomed baby Isabelle Amarachi at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in L.A. on April 21.

THE DIGIT

$92 MILLION

That’s how much “The Amazing Spider-Man 2” made over the weekend in North America. Its production and global marketing costs are estimated to be roughly $400 million, according to the New York Times.
